Why do you want to be a physician?

Being a physician is a privilege and an honor. The human efforts to heal others when they are sick is an age old profession that gets at the core of human altruism, empathy and compassion. This fundamental drive to help others brought me to medicine and I believe it is intrinsic to human nature to be satisfied after providing relief to someone else. I experience a lot of joy when in the service of others and learning medicine has provided me some of the most impactful means to serve.

Why did you choose Texas A&M College of Medicine?

Growing up in Texas, I had always heard of the Aggies and was assimilated into the UT vs A&M rivalry. After going to UT for undergrad, I was excited at the idea of getting to also attend A&M. I am now able to play on both sides of the rivalry and can relate with a wide variety of people who have gone to either of these top public universities.

Why did you choose to pursue a graduate degree in addition to the MD?

Because I am interested in the way money impacts human behavior and society as a whole, studying business was the best way I could gain the formal education necessary to widen my views and help me understand why things are the way they are. Medicine and business in particular are closely intertwined and to understand only one would be to miss out on the whole.

What are your career goals and how do you feel the MD Plus Program will help you?

I plan on spending my career practicing medicine, managing research and development projects, and giving back through philanthropic efforts and education. The skill set I am acquiring through the business school will open doors to different ways that medical knowledge can be used, such as in healthcare systems management, academic research, and in the development of medical technology.
